Friends and What They Stand For.

While the Society of Friends in the world is just a little more than holding its own numerically, it is evident that it is growing in influence. It has never sought numbers, and the masses of people have not been attracted to it. Its influence has not been limited to its members, however, and t oday there is more of the world's destiny in its hands than ever before.

Just what do Friends stand for? Friends have been pioneers in work for the abolition of slavery, for peace, the equality of men and women, education, fair treatment of Indians, temperance, and prison reform; they have put into practice the teaching of Jesus to "love your enemies." There is now a sense of unity among Friends throughout the world. Today it is a religous community happily free from much of the static creedalism that so constantly obstructs the life of the Church of Christ. For that we Quakers may, with simplicity of heart, be truly thankful. But it would, I think, be a serious error to suppose that this implied a lack of grip on the fundamentals of the Christian religion, a state of belief going no further than to teach its members to trust the light which illumines his or her own soul. The Divine works normally through the human and not apart from it. But it must always be remembered that the spirit of God does not save us the trouble of thinking for ourselves.

I feel happy and congenial as a member among Friends because they, more than most Christians, lay the main stress upon the cultivation of the inner life. They have endeavored to reduce religion to its essential traits, to an uttermost simplicity. They believe supremely in the mearness of God to the human soul, in direct intercourse and immediate communion, in a first-hand discovery of God.

Their worship is arranged to further as much as possible this immensely important business. They encourage in every way possible individual responsibility in all that concerns and pertains to the religious life. They insist that each person ought to be captain of his own soul and to do his own worshiping for himself, that everyone ought to feel the joy, surprise, and wonder that comes when the soul discovers the meaning of fellowship with a Great Companion.

The Inward Light that is so often spoken of in the Society of Friends is nothing more than the knowledge of God. This knowledge does not come to us by observation of the things about us, like our knowledge of the world of nature, nor by intellectual proof, nor by the testimony of other embodied as the authority of Church of Bible. All these are invaluable as aids to, and preparations for, the true knowledge of God, but they cannot give it to us until we come to the point of seeing with our own inward eyes. In other words, the knowledge of God comes by revelation. But we have tried to lay a strong foundation for this statement by showing that it does not stand alone, that the same is true in measure of all that makes life truly worth living, all that in the end really matters: our experience of beauty, goodness, moral worth and personal character. God reveals Himself to us in all that we know for ourselves of the Truth, the Beautiful, the Good; and most of all in the One Life of perfect truth, beauty and goodness. The essential thought behind all this is that God and man are not so completely separated as we often think: that thay have something in common: that God has that in Him which can be adequately expressed in a perfect human life, and that man at his best has that in him which can be an adequate expression of God.

The Divine Personality with whom our spirits have communion reveals Himself along the common ways of life, and with the help of the natural faculties of man.

For my own part I deeply respect and love the sincerity of Friends, for sincerity is basic to any society of Friends. May and Agnes W. Harrison

The committee appointed to write to Milo J. Hinckle concerning the conviction of the Five Years Meeting's Executive Committee as presented by John A. Cary have received an answer and it has been read.

After reading Milo J. Hinckles letter we feel there is but one thing to do. It might be well to quote, from his letter, a few lines. "No I have had no "change of heart" toward You, it is not less love for Worcester, but more love and a sense of responsibility for the Five Years Meeting that has raised the question. I dare not be recreant to my promise to you, a promise is sacred and binding until the other party releases.

Nevertheless, as I pray and meditate. I must confess that the Five Years Meeting with its great need and the lack of available helpers is the field that seems to stand out and claim my contribution of service at this time."

We appoint Arthur W. Hawkes Willard C. Swift and Agnes W. Harrison to write Miles S. Hinckle granting him an unconditional release and expressing our regrets, also our appreciation of his call to larger service and wish him God's speed.

It is the wish of the meeting that this committee also inform
